THE SESSION.

There is no legislation, says The Times, of the first degree in prospect, and the House of Commons, after some preliminary criticism of the Government during the debate on the Address, will settle down to an extended course of finance. The two War Committees of backbench members, Unionist and Liberal, have arranged independently to meet to-day to consider what course of action each shall take during the debate on the Address. At both meetings special consideration will be given to the question of an air policy. The two Committees will probably be found in agreement in pressing upon the Government the desirability of establishing a distinct departnect, with a Minister responsible to Parliament, to take charge of a united air service. TEN MEN KILLED. Admiralty announces that H.M.S. Arethusa struck a mine off the east coast. It is feared she will become a total wreck. About ten men lost their lives.

THE COMMAND OF THE SEA.

The demand of the City of London meeting yesterday that the Government shall give the Navy freedom to use its sea power in the war will be echoed and endorsed by the whole nation, declares the Duily Mail. The maval officer is convinced that if a rigid blockade had been established from the first week of the war German resistance would already have been broken. He still thinks that it given a free hand he could do much to hurt the enemy. But the sands are running out. The way for us to win is to use our sharpest weapon remorselessly, and no longer keep it sheathed—to deal with all these difficulties of suppy to and through neutral countries by placing the whole control of them in the hands of the Admiralty. That is the way of the sea. If we dare not take it, then, indeed, we deserve to go under.

It is admitted in official circles that the United States Government finds itself in delicate position as the result of its Note to the Endente on the disarmament of merchantmen, followed, as it was, by the memoranding from the Central Powers threatening such vessels unless they were disarmed. Any expression appearing to approve of the Teutomic Position, it is believed, would be followed immediately by diplomatic controversies, and might even be called an unneutral act, while adverse criticism of that position might also give offence.
